

Tommy Kirchhoff was born February 29, 1972. He began studying under Victor Fu in October 2003. He has practiced hard to become one of Master Fu's top students. Tommy has been teaching Fu Style since 2004, and has many students in Utah.

Tommy was an alpine ski racer in both high school and college. He began teaching skiing at age 15, and went on to coach his college race team and perform as club president. In college, Tommy studied a number of physical education classes, including kinesiology.

In college, Tommy received a great deal of notoriety for his humor column in the campus newspaper, The Lanthorn. In 1994, Tommy moved to Telluride, Colorado, and continued his literary career with his humor column in the Telluride Daily Planet. Tommy moved to Park City, Utah in 1999. In 2000, Tommy started up his own humor magazine called Wild Utah. Tommy has published two ISBN frontlist book titles, and currently has a book in galley form on Scribd.com pertaining to the unique aspects of Fu Style Wudang Boxing and their application to athletics.

In May 2010, Tommy traveled to New York to be on the Today Show twice with his singing Doberman, Fluffy.

In December 2010, Tommy's abstract, "A Study on How to Apply Tai Chi to Alpine Skiing" was published in the International Congress on Science & Skiing's "Book of Abstracts" in St. Christoph am Arlberg, Austria.